Don't even think of the alternative to good manners on the Skytrain

WITH the new express train linking Suvarnabhumi airport to central Bangkok due to open soon, it's time to celebrate what is after all a major achievement. It's probably also a good time to launch a campaign to promote considerate travel. Just think of the number of newly arrived airline passengers who will use this new service and then join the BTS Skytrain system. Many will be carrying large suitcases or wearing bulky rucksacks on their backs.

The latter can be especially annoying when their owners innocently turn around on crowded trains. Hopefully, they will be required to take off their rucksacks and place them at their feet. Many major department stores like Harrod's in London employ security guards to tell rucksack carriers to carry their load by hand to prevent angry confrontations with shoppers they would otherwise have banged into.

A number of other issues should be covered in this campaign of good behaviour, such as passengers covering their nose and mouth when sneezing or coughing, and moving down inside the carriage to make way for other travelers. A similar campaign abroad uses as its catchphrase: 'A little thought from each of us, a big difference for everyone.' It's apparently working very well.

Currency woes of our hotels

THE weakness of the British pound - down 23% against the Euro and even more against the Thai baht - plus the ongoing recession are causing huge numbers of Brits to reconsider their holiday plans. New figures show, for example, that the number of Brits vacationing in Spain is down by as much as 23.4% compared to 2008 because of the strength of the Euro.

Statistics for Thailand are not yet available, but reliable local sources are saying that the British inbound market has been seriously affected. For better value, Brits (amongst many other nationalities) are now looking for cheaper holidays in countries such as Egypt, Turkey and Vietnam.

What can Thailand do? For a start, abandon the long-held philosophy amongst top hotels that room rates should not come down. This is based on the erroneous belief that once the market knows hoteliers have reduced their rates, it will be difficult if not impossible for their marketing managers to drag them up again once the economic situation improves. By maintaining prices, those top hotels are also missing out because visitors are now discovering a generation of good quality boutiques hotels and serviced apartments who are prepared to offer more realistic (read lower) rates.

Reflection

Until May 9 at Gossip Gallery - Silom Galleria

NARET Yamaharn's latest contemporary works will be available for viewing at Gossip Gallery until May 9. As the title suggests, the collection's main inspiration originates from the artist's visions derived from the shadows his objects cast on a surface. Depending on the brightness of the illuminating light, the images can be vivid with color, or dull and bland. Change is a given, but the reflections never go away.

The exhibition will be open for viewing Monday - Saturday from 10am - 7pm (Sunday viewings are by appointment only).

Mile-high club?

A man boards an aircraft in London and takes his seat. After settling in he notices a very beautiful woman boarding the plane. He realizes she's heading straight towards him and can't believe his luck when she sits down next to him.

Not knowing what to say but eager to talk, he blurts out: "business trip or vacation?"

She turns to him, smiles and says: "Business. I'm going to the annual nymphomaniac convention in the United States."

The man swallows hard. Here is the most gorgeous woman he's ever seen, and she's going to a meeting for sex addicts!

Struggling to maintain his composure, he asks: "What's your role at this convention?"

"Lecturer," she responds. "I use my experience to debunk some of the popular myths about sexuality."

"Really," he smiles, "what myths are those?"

"Well," she explains, "one popular myth is that African American men are the most well endowed when, in fact, it's the Native American Indian who is most likely to possess that trait.

"Another popular myth is that French men are the best lovers, when actually it is the Greeks.

"We have also found that the best potential lovers in all categories are the Irish."

Suddenly the woman becomes uncomfortable and blushes. "I'm sorry," she says, "I really shouldn't be discussing this with you, I don't even know your name."

"Tonto," the man says - "Tonto Papadopoulos, but my friends call me Paddy."

The old lady's nuts

A preacher visits an elderly woman from his congregation. As he sits on the couch he notices a large bowl of peanuts on the coffee table. "Mind if I have a few?" he asks.

"No, not at all," the woman replies. They chat for an hour and as the preacher stands to leave, he realizes that instead of eating just a few peanuts, he emptied most of the bowl. "I'm so sorry for eating all your peanuts. I really just meant to eat a few," he says.

"Oh that's all right," replies the woman. "Ever since I lost my teeth all I can do is suck the chocolate off them."

The best of George W. Bush

- "If we don't succeed, we run the risk of failure."
- "One word sums up probably the responsibility of any Governor, and that one word is 'to be prepared.'"
- "I have made good judgments in the past. I have made good judgments in the future."
- "The future will be better tomorrow."
- "We're going to have the best educated American people in the world."
- "A low voter turnout is an indication of fewer people going to the polls."
- "I have opinions of my own - strong opinions - but I don't always agree with them."
- "We are ready for any unforeseen event that may or may not occur."
- "For NASA, space is still a high priority."
- "Quite frankly, teachers are the only profession that teach our children."
- "It isn't pollution that's harming the environment. It's the impurities in our air and water that are doing it."
- "Public speaking is very easy."

Drunk's confession

One night a man - who was in no shape to drive - wisely left his car parked outside the pub and walked home. As he staggered along the road, a policeman stopped him and asked: "What are you doing out here at 2am?" "I'm going to a lecture," said the man. "And just who is going to give a lecture at this hour?" the cop asked. "My wife!"

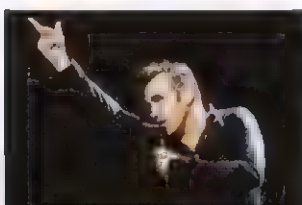

Morrissey

Years of Refusal

THE king of the depressed returns with his ninth studio album and once again has a crack at all that is wrong with life. Opening with lyrics such as "no true friends in modern life," you'd be forgiven for thinking Morrissey needs to be told a few jokes to cheer up. But Morrissey is always happiest at his lowest, and once again sings his emo stories over glam-rock riffs and feel good synths which his legions of fans are sure to love.

Verdict: Morrissey offers another emotional roller-coaster which provides listeners with an enjoyable ride.

Kelly Clarkson

All I Ever Wanted

IT'S hard to believe it's seven years since Kelly Clarkson won American pop idol. While everyone jokes that the show's creator Simon Cowell knows how to turn crap into money, in the case of Kelly Clarkson it seems that the girl has genuine talent.

While she may have won the show and arrived on radio waves singing the usual pop ballads, Kelly has slowly forged her own style and it turns out she's a bit of a badass. There were hints of her mean streak in 2004's 'Since you been gone,' and since that time Kelly has found herself likened to Avril Lavigne and Pink, notorious for venting their anger over pop punk chords.

Kelly's latest collection includes a rocking mix of songs full of hooks and catchy choruses, all displaying her mesmerizing voice. "I'm not your love monkey, so be takin' back all of the lies you sold," she cries on 'Whyyawannabringmedown.'

But it's not all highlights on this album. Kelly occasionally slips into yawn inducing ballad territory which will have you reaching for the 'skip' button.

Verdict: When she's soppy, she's dull. When she's angry, she rocks. If Avril Lavigne and Pink excite you, put this album on your shopping list.

U2

U2's 12th studio album sees the masters of rock back with another excellent album, taking both a musical step forward while also rediscovering their Zooropa days. Guitarist The Edge continues to do what he does best and creates an ear-enlightening wall of sound that holds up Bono's yelps of personal and global injustices.

The bespectacled frontman is somewhat more self aware on this album. It's as if he knows that people think he's a bit of a hypocrite for preaching to stop global warming while his carbon footprint is huge. "The right to appear ridiculous is something I hold dear" he sings in 'I'll go crazy,' and there are many more instances where you'll feel as though Bono doubts that he'll ever be able to fully practice what he preaches. These insecurities make for excellent listening though.

Verdict: U2 proves once again it's a great rock 'n' roll band. Definite highlights are 'Get on your boots' and 'Stand up comedy.'

Neko Case

Middle Cyclone

ALTERNATIVE country is the order of the day with Neko Case's fifth studio album. Her vocal range is used to great effect over 14 tracks featuring guest artists such as members of The New Pornographers, Los Lobos, Calexico, The Sadies, Visqueen, The Lilys, Giant Sand, and others. The album features 12 new songs plus covers of 'Never Turn Your Back on Mother Earth' by Sparks, and 'Don't Forget Me' by Harry Nilsson.

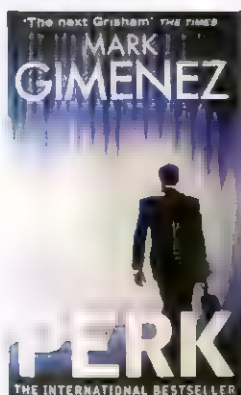

Verdict: Neko sings stories of lovesickness with such pure emotion that you can't help but fall in love with her music.

Royksopp

Junior

NORWEGIAN chill-out masters Royksopp drag listeners back into their dreamy world with their finest album yet. They take the best elements of debut album "Melody AM" and follow-up "The Understanding," and fuse them together to create an excellent collection of electro and house tunes that are sure to be heard at house parties throughout the kingdom.

Verdict: The coolest guys of chill-out return with an ice-cold collection of crisp beats just perfect for parties.

Drivers' anger: Will conditions ever be better on Bangkok's roads?

Rights - and being wrong on the road

CHANGE comes slowly with regard to good manners among road users in Thailand. It took years, for example, for drivers here to get used to the idea that confusion, and therefore accidents, on the highways could best be avoided if vehicles actually stayed within assigned traffic lanes.

Unfortunately it may still take some time for drivers to get accustomed to the following:

- Turning on indicator lights doesn't give a driver the automatic right to switch lanes without regard to the vehicle immediately behind. The word "indicator" says it all - the light is merely an indication of intention, and not an order to get out of the way.
- Black and white pedestrian crossings are designed to allow people to move safely from one side of the road to the other. It is not there to allow motorbikes or buses to honk their horns at people who have the temerity to actually expect them to stop.
- Exiting a car park on to a main road isn't an excuse for a driver to totally ignore pedestrians who may have ventured in their path.
- Turning from a side road into a main road requires vehicles to stop before, not after.

Why are economy seats so uncomfortable? Because they're meant to be that way

HERE'S some extremely unsettling news for those people who have suffered the agonies of traveling long haul in the back end of an aircraft: economy class seats have apparently been designed to be deliberately uncomfortable - so their occupants will vow to upgrade to business class on their next flight.

This cynical ploy, exposed recently by an airline executive to the BigChilli, is the travel industry's equivalent to the built-in obsolescence that ensures consumers continually update their computers and cars, or the fashion world's constant infatuation with change.

Shift, twist and wriggle your way round an economy class seat as much as you like, stuff extra blankets under your butt or wrap a stabilizer round your neck, the fact is, long-lasting comfort in 'cattle class' is elusive. By the end of your flight, your body feels as if it's been in a tumble dryer.

If you find this cynicism hard to believe, just try and think of the last time you saw an airline extolling the virtues of its economy class seats. They may bang on about the wonders of the front sections of their aircraft, with all of them claiming to have the world's best sleeper-seats, but none are brave enough to venture into the economy class to show off their torture racks.

To find a seat less comfortable is difficult. Admittedly a modern aircraft seat has to embody a number of special features (including remote controls set in the arm rests that a passenger's body inadvertently sets off at every change of position!!) and they have to be exceptionally strong in case of accidents, but that should not alter the fact that you'd never actually choose to buy a chair this dreadfully uncomfortable for your home or even office.

The airlines' obsession with packing in as many passengers and therefore chairs as possible is, of course, mostly responsible for this situation. And with the average traveler getting bigger and more obese by the year, there's little hope of improvement or greater comfort.

Cost is yet another factor. With an upgrade from economy to business class costing as much as four times more, there's little chance of most passengers actually getting the comfort they crave.

After revealing his industry's indifference towards economy class passengers, the airline executive had the audacity to admit that he himself would hate to fly in that section of aircraft, especially in the seats that have no direct access to the aisles, which actually accounts for about 70% of all places.

Unfortunately, the alternative for travel-weary economy class customers is to eventually give up on long-haul flying. And who loses out then?

Sex to sell wine. Whatever next?

Mmmm, look at those saucy mushrooms - definitely "Fungtastic"

SEX is used in a variety of guises to market all kinds of products. From motor cars to chocolate bars, the world's favorite pastime is gainfully employed to boost sales.

Credibility was stretched recently in Bangkok, however, when a wine supplier opted for sex (in a certain guise) to promote its products. After the usual wine tasting, a bevy of pretty models then proceeded to appear on a specially constructed catwalk, each cradling a bottle of wine in their arms and sashaying along to the sound of suitably sexy music.

Even though the girls were conservatively attired, it was a rather odd juxtaposition of concepts. The resulting spectacle was strange, it has to be said.

What will they think of next?

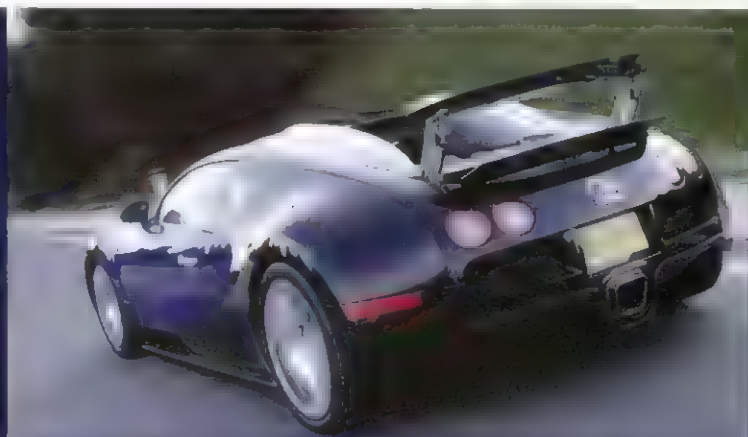

It's no fun losing a parking ticket

OF all the frustrations in Bangkok life, a lost parking ticket is one of the most frequent and certainly one of the most irritating. It's truly amazing how often they go missing. After frantically re-tracking your steps, searching your trouser and jacket pockets, and maybe even looking in your shoes, you're then faced with a humorless and totally unsympathetic parking attendant who hits you with a ridiculously high penalty charge.

And to make matters worse, this invariably happens late at night or when you're due at an important meeting.

There's just got to be a better system.

Kraam vroom! High performance vehicles can reach speeds way above the legal limit, but why?

Unlimited speeds on roads with limits

TO get away from the frustrations of life in Bangkok, an expatriate business man has revealed he loved nothing more than to drive his German-made sports car on the elevated highway between Bang Na and Chonburi at speeds in excess of 220 kmph. At night, it is one of the quietest and best lit stretches of road in the country, and its surface is generally very consistent.

His speed breached the official limit by at least 100 kmph.

Meanwhile, in the UK, it's been reported that a motorcyclist was clocked by police barreling along at even higher speeds. At least he was on his own, for another clearly demented motorcyclist had his 14-year-old son on the rear seat as he topped 122 mph on a rain-soaked road. (He was later jailed for six months for his "unbelievable lack of responsibility" - and rightly too.)

All of which begs the question, why do these drivers do it?

The answer, of course, is because they can. Simple as that. In each case, these people are in charge of vehicles capable of enormous speeds - way above what is permitted by law.

So why are car and motorcycle companies allowed to manufacture such speed machines? It's another of life's great conundrums.

Purachatra Memorial Day

HRH Princess Mahachakri Sirindhorn graciously presided over the Purachatra Memorial Day, an auspicious event co-organized by the Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas, Hua Hin and the Vimalachatra 84th Anniversary Fund. The event was in honour of HRH Princess Purachatra's 30-year service to the Thai monarchy.

The Purachatra Memorial Day at Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas, Hua Hin

by Michael Moore

THRH Prince Purachatra, son of King Rama V and founder of the Chatrajaya family, was an important person in the development of Thailand and in Hua Hin in particular. It was fitting that on 7 March 2009, the Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas in Hua Hin was the site of celebrations honouring this talented and farsighted prince and all that he accomplished during his 30 years of service to the Monarchy and the Kingdom of Thailand.

The Purachatra Memorial Day celebrations were graciously presided over by HRH Princess Mahachakri Sirindhorn and were organized by the Vimalachatra 84th Anniversary Fund, members of the Chatrajaya family and the Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas.

An important part of the proceedings were the announcement of international standard awards presented by the HRH the Princess and given in honour of Prince Purachatra. The Contemporary Architecture Award went to the Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas, Hua Hin, the Hotel Business Pioneer Award was received by Than Puying Chanat Piyaoui, and the Tourism Award went to General Chalermchai Jaruwat.

After watching the presentation of the awards, everyone proceeded to hotel's charming Museum Coffee & Tea Corner for a traditional English high tea. Everyone enjoyed themselves and many were surprised to learn that high tea is a standard part of the Tea Corner's repertoire and is available each day.

Originally only nine holes, it was enlarged to an 18-hole course in 1929 and opened by King Rama VII. The golf course still exists and is an integral part of Hua Hin's current attractions.

An integral part of the ceremonies was an enumeration and recollection of the numerous achievements of HRH Prince Purachatra. Educated in Europe, he was a man of broad vision and talents and served in the Army Corps of engineers where he introduced Thailand to many of the technological innovations that were being developed in the world surrounding the Kingdom. Among other things, he established the country's aviation industry, radio network and post and cable system. He has often been called "the father" of Thailand's Royal State Railway, Army Signal Corps, Royal Army Engineers, Broadcasting System, and the country's Hotel Industry. He is also known as the "initiator" of the Thai Tourism Authority, the Thai Mason's Association and the Thai Civil Aviation System.

HRH Prince Purachatra recognized the potential of Hua Hin when it was only a small and sleepy fishing village. Eighty years ago, he laid the foundations for transforming Hua Hin and environs into the resort that Thais and foreign visitors enjoy today.

He adopted a four pronged approach to developing Hua Hin into a world-class destination that included creating an infrastructure for transportation, accommodation, administration and recreation. Ultimately, this infrastructure not only served Hua Hin, but also benefited the Kingdom as a whole.

The Prince recognized that for Hua Hin to serve as a seaside resort it would have to be not only accessible to the elite, but also to ordinary Thais. To make this happen he facilitated the 1917 extension of the railway to Hua Hin. He also insured that the charming railway station that exists to this day was built and that a road extended from the station to the beach.

Accommodation was necessary and HRH the Prince, created bungalows on 76 rai of railway land fronting the beach. To entice foreign visitors in 1922 he commissioned the railway's Italian architect to create an international standard hotel of 14 rooms. The State Railway Hotel was completed in only one year and cost 128,634.94 baht to build – a paltry amount by today's standards, but a significant amount of in the 1920's. Over the years this hotel went through several permutations and is now known as the Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas. Thankfully, the original building has been preserved and is an integral part of the present structure.

Also in 1923, Thailand's first golf course was built opposite the train station to attract foreigners and affluent Thais. Originally only nine holes, it was enlarged to an 18-hole course in 1929 and opened by King Rama VII. The golf course still exists and is an integral part of Hua Hin's current attractions.

The Prince recognized that an administrative structure would have to be established to insure Hua Hin's governance and growth. He established the "West Seaside Resort Maintenance Council" that was financed primarily by the State Railway. It monitored city planning, road construction, clinics, water processing and a modern market – Chatrajaya Market – named in the Prince's honour.

HRH Prince Purachatra was a man of many talents who contributed much to his country. For a list of his accomplishments, simply take a look around. Airplanes, railways, hotels, the tourist industry, the postal service and infinitely more are what he contributed to his country. He was indeed a remarkable man.

Celebrating 100 Years of Hua Hin

This year marks 100 years since the railway line reached Hua Hin, cementing its future as Thailand's first resort town. To celebrate the occasion, the local authorities are arranging a series of free events over the coming months.

It was during the reign of King Rama VI, the Royal State Railway of Siam opened a line to the seaside town in order to allow ease of access for the royal family. A beautiful railway station was built and to this day remains as one of the oldest, most well preserved stations in Thailand. The advent of the railway was closely followed by the construction of Klai Kangwon Palace in 1926 by King Rama VII. Meaning 'far from worries' in Thai, Klai Kangwon continues to be used as the official royal residence; a fact that ensures Hua Hin has a special place in the hearts of all Thai people. In recent years, the King has spent much of his time in residence at the palace. His presence means that the area is home to military bases that include an elite parachute regiment and the Royal Thai Police, resulting in a very low crime rate in the town.

Other significant events that have contributed to Hua Hin's growth were the opening of the Royal Hua Hin Golf Course in October 1922, and in 1926 the introduction of European Express trains with sleeper berths running from Bangkok to Penang and Butterworth in Malaysia.

During the chaos of World War 2 stories of Hua Hin's tranquility spread throughout the east and following the war infrastructure and access to transportation was improved dramatically.

In recent years the once sleepy beachfront resort town of Hua Hin has attracted well-deserved attention. As the location of the King of Thailand's summer palace, Hua Hin found favour with Thais long before it was discovered by Western tourists. Today, however, it is not just Bangkokians slipping away for a weekend of clean air and fresh seafood that visit the town. Hua Hin is now squarely on the map as a premier holiday destination and is attracting visitors from around the world.

The town has a thriving community, nine excellent golf courses, many international and local hotels and resorts, a vibrant nightlife and excellent restaurants. The town can now be easily reached by air, water, road, and railway; in fact the renowned Orient Express stops in Hua Hin several times a month.

Residents and visitors can look forward to the following events: (many dates still to be confirmed).

May Summer Fest

The Honda Summer Fest'@ Hua Hin will feature concerts

by Thai artists. It will take place from midday to 2 a.m. on May 17th at Khao Takieb Beach, Hua Hin. Over 20 bands and DJs are scheduled for the event which is guaranteed to attract thousands of visitors. Bands will include Modern Dog, Groove Rider and the popular ska outfit, T-Bone.

June Jazz Festival

This year, the Hua Hin Jazz Festival will be held on June 12 – 14th. Originally founded by the Hilton Hua Hin Resort and Spa eight years ago the event pulls in more than 15,000 visitors. Although the free event is one of the town's biggest annual attractions in recent years it has been blighted by poor organization and lack-lustre bands. This year sees a new events management company on board and hopefully a more professional festival. The line-up of bands is not available yet...

July & August Golf Festival

The Tourism Authority of Thailand Phetchaburi Office, together with the Phetchaburi - Prachuap Khiri Khan Golf Course Association, invites all golf lovers to join in the fun during the Hua Hin/Cha-am Golf Festival throughout August. Further information can be obtained from TAT Central Region 2 on 0323 471 005-6 during government office hours or from any of the nine participating golf courses.

Hua Hin Regatta

The popular Hua Hin Regatta which attracts upwards of 300 competitors each year will take place in the resort town from July 30th until August 3rd. The great location guarantees top entertainment as competitors try to bag trophies for various classes of boat. The event takes place at Hua Hin Naval Yacht Club near Klai Kangwong Palace. If you are interested in joining the competition or would like more information please call the Public Relations Department of The Sailing Association of Thailand 081-583-9689, 02-472-0852 or go onto the website: www.yrat.or.th

September Hua Hin Film Festival

A series of short films will be shown that celebrate 100 years of Hua Hin.

November Hua Hin Food Festival

Held from November 18th – 22nd, the Hua Hin Food Festival is bound to be one of the city's most popular events. Dozens of vendors will line the streets with stalls offering local delicacies, day and night.

VIP Train Journey

Organized by Orient Express, a VIP Train will run from Bangkok to Hua Hin. The luxurious trip will include live music and food.

December Vintage Car Rally

This year's Vintage Car Rally will be held on December 11th – 12th. Over 60 selected vintage, classic and replica cars will join the event. The car rally will begin the 225-kilometre journey from the Sofitel Central Plaza Bangkok, stopping in Phetchaburi province for lunch at a famous local restaurant before continuing onwards, arriving in Hua Hin around 5pm. One of the event's main sponsors, Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas, Hua Hin will also host a fabulous Gala Dinner.

Introducing Martin Raich, GM of the Sheraton Hua Hin Resort & Spa

When Martin Raich accepted the post of GM at the Sheraton Hua Hin Resort & Spa in September 2008 the town was looking forward to another peak season. Few could have predicted the turmoil that followed. Yet despite taking the reins during difficult times, the Austrian national remains optimistic about the country's future as a premier tourist destination.

A veteran hotelier with over 22 years' experience, Martin Raich speaks candidly about his tendency to come into a resort, get the operation running smoothly and move on. "It's the challenge of doing something new that has kept me motivated." And those challenges have been quite considerable. After the tragedy of the tsunami, Martin was tasked with enhancing Le Meridien Khao Lak.

"There were two main problems. Thai guests are very superstitious and would not come to the hotel because as far as they are concerned there are many ghosts in the area. Fortunately the location and style of the resort also has appeal for Europeans and that is now the main market. Attracting staff was also very difficult as most Thais want to work in the cities. In order to lure them, resorts in Khao Lak offer some of the best wages in the country," says Martin.

After two years in Khao Lak he accepted the post at the Sheraton Hua Hin Resort & Spa, a brand new property popular with both Thai and foreign visitors. "From an hoteliers perspective, Hua Hin is a very interesting place," asserts Martin. "There is no other place in Thailand, other than Bangkok, where you can find so many major hospitality brands competing in the same town."

According to Martin, Hua Hin's visitor figures also reveal the town's unique environment as a tourist destination. "Whereas Pattaya attracts around four million foreigners and 300,000 local visitors annually, in Hua Hin it's the reverse. The town welcomes over four million locals but only around 400,000 foreigners. At weekends Bangkok lives here!"

During the recent ASEAN Summit the Sheraton Hua Hin Resort & Spa played an important role as the event's press centre. It was also the resort of choice for the Singaporean delegation.

"The fact that we are a new resort and have a reputation for excellent security and safety systems, a modern and efficient communications network, as well as beautiful surroundings, clearly influenced their decision to stay with us," says Martin.

Despite Thailand's turbulent year, Martin is confident that the country will soon be back on track and that arrival numbers will keep increasing. "Thailand is the perfect destination. Nowhere else in Asia can compete," he says.

For Martin, the country increasingly feels like home. "After over two decades in the business I'm less keen to move on than I used to be. I like Hua Hin and this resort very much. I also have a young child and another on the way soon so I think I'll be here for some time."

Napalai Resort & Spa

Located in the up and coming Kao Takiab district, Napalai Resort & Spa offers spacious and comfortable accommodation at reasonable rates. Ideal for the budget traveler, the low rise hotel is built around a central swimming pool and offers Superior and Deluxe rooms, a restaurant, spa, and meeting facilities. Each of the 60 rooms provides a private balcony with views towards the famous Kao Takiab Hill and Wat Run Thom, or out across the rolling hills. Although the property is not beachfront it is only a 150 metre walk from the white sand bay overlooked by the famous golden Buddha image.

The 24 Deluxe rooms have a double or twin bed, depending on guest requirements. Rooms are a generous 42 square metres and have a large bathroom with rain shower and bathtub. Décor is simple but tastefully done in contemporary Thai style. The wooden furniture is made from rich dark woods; white cotton sheets are enlivened by colourful Thai silks and cushions. In-room amenities include cable TV, safe, and tea and coffee making facilities. Wireless internet is available but is not complimentary as you would normally expect from a small independent hotel.

A highlight of the resort is its poolside spa. The Amana Spa features four private treatment rooms, each with its own steam room, and well trained therapists ready to help you relax and rejuvenate. Treatments from the extensive spa menu include a 30 minute Thai herbal steam; a wonderful way to start or finish any of the other treatments on offer. Other herbal-based options include the renowned luk prakob, a hot compress filled with traditional medicinal herbs. The 90-minute treatment is ideal for easing aching muscle after a day on the golf course. In addition to individual treatments, a range of value for money spa packages is also available.

For those wishing to conduct a business meeting, a room for up to 80 persons is available. The Sea Breeze Restaurant can provide a fully catered service of Thai or international cuisine.

Napalai Resort & Spa is located six kilometres from the heart of Hua Hin. The hotel is walking distance from Kao Takiab Beach and close to many excellent local restaurants and bars. The Napalai Resort & Spa offers a twice daily shuttle service to Hua Hin for a fee. A taxi service is also available opposite the hotel.

Cafe de Paris at the Railway Restaurant Sofitel Centara Grand Resort & Villas Hua Hin

Thailand is justifiably famous for the high quality of buffet dining at its numerous five-star hotels. For one of these restaurants to stand above the crowd, it must be truly extraordinary. Such is the case with the "Café de Paris" French Buffet that operates on Saturday evenings at the Railway Restaurant at the venerable Sofitel Centara Grand Resort and Villas in Hua Hin.

The resort itself began life 1923 with the opening of a 14 room structure designed by an Italian architect and commissioned by the visionary H.R.H. Prince Purachatra. Although modified and enlarged over the years to include a 207 room resort and 42 villas, the resort maintains its original style of architecture and charm. The Railway Restaurant with both indoor and outdoor seating is located in the centre of the resort and is operated under the watchful eye of Executive Chef Adrian O'Herlihy and a cadre of talented chefs.

Many buffets advertise that they have "live cooking stations", but all too often this turns out to be a case of a chef tending food that has already been cooked. This isn't what happens at the Café de Paris buffet. There are chefs everywhere cooking food to order and interacting with customers.

Another salient feature of this buffet is the breadth and quality of the ingredients on offer. Chef O'Herlihy has been in Thailand for several years and has developed a network of both local and international suppliers unmatched at virtually any hotel in the Kingdom.

A good example is the excellent frog legs, something this reviewer has never encountered on a buffet in Thailand. Chef O'Herlihy imports them from Vietnam. His oysters are Fin de Clair Oysters from Brittany. The venison is from New Zealand and the beef from Australia. The list is seemingly endless and the buffet is filled with items not often seen at other buffets. To keep life interesting for those who are regulars at the buffet, Chef O'Herlihy changes some items each week.

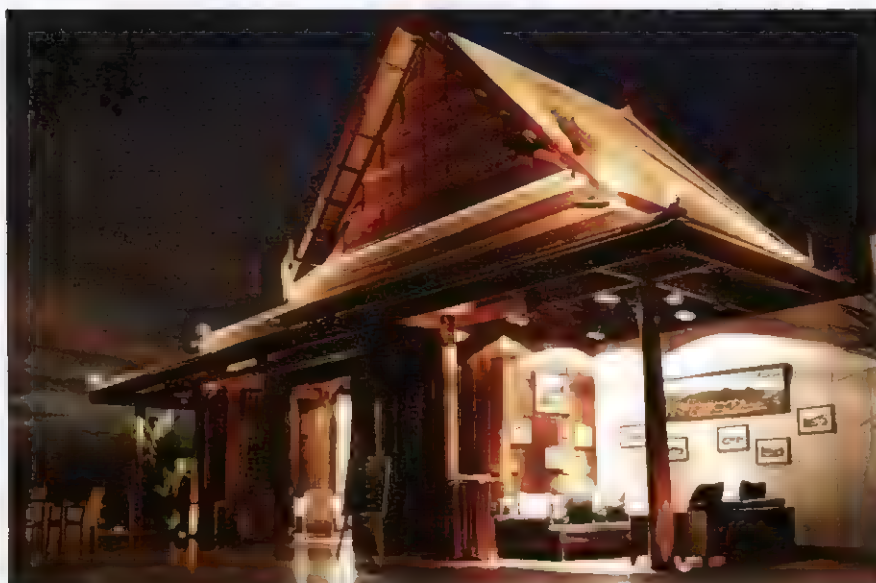

There were several highlights that made a lasting impression during our visit. Caesar Salad when prepared to order can be a treat, but when prepared in advance, it can be dismal. At this buffet a chef prepares it to order. The seafood here is a stellar attraction, especially those Fin de Clair Oysters, but equally impressive are the mounds of slipper lobster, mussels, rivers prawns and Alaskan king crab legs. If you are a meat lover, the live station with Roast Leg of Lamb, Roast Rib of Beef and Grilled Fillet of Beef is a real treat.

The salads are exemplary and many are prepared to order. The dessert station is a hedonist's dream. Among the highlights during our visit were a smashing Ricotta Tart with Dried Fruit Compote and a homely Forest Berry Crumble with Crème Anglaise.

Hopefully, you get the message. Café de Paris is a memorable buffet that stands head and shoulders above most of the competition. It is a must for anyone visiting Thailand's oldest beach resort. In fact, it is so good; it warrants a special trip to Hua Hin just to enjoy the buffet!

The Terrace at the Banyan Golf Club Hua Hin

If you are looking for an inspiring setting for a meal, forget beachfront views. The Gulf of Thailand is no match for the glorious sea of green that welcomes diners at Mulligan's Pub and The Terrace. Located within the clubhouse of the Banyan Golf Club, the venue features striking architecture that skilfully blends traditional Thai style with contemporary sensibilities, making it one of the most impressive structures in region.

Hua Hin's newest epicurean experience is attracting the non-golfing fraternity keen to taste the fine food and soak in the views. Plan to arrive at around 5.30 p.m. and start the evening on the deck at Mulligan's Pub enjoying an ice cold beer or glass of wine as the sun slowly sinks below the horizon. Suitably relaxed, diners can move on to The Terrace. This unique restaurant offers a carefully composed menu of international and Thai dishes at favourable prices.

A highlight of dining at The Terrace is the opportunity to explore the wine collection established by Khun Sanit, a passionate sommelier ranked among Thailand's top ten. Having ordered a Bayan smoked salmon salad with greens in a balsamic dressing, I opted for the Chilean Anekana, a refreshing Sauvignon Blanc ideal to cut through the rich fish. Other light summer salads include sweet mango and rocket salad with crispy bacon, and Parma ham with avocado. Soup lovers can enjoy delicate lobster bisque with Cognac or a comforting asparagus cream soup with truffle oil.

Main dishes include an excellent selection of pasta dishes, pizzas and hearty burgers but it is the grill section that caught my attention. The measure of a good restaurant can easily be gauged by the quality of its beef. At The Terrace it is premium quality Australian tenderloin, striploin and ribeye on offer. Succulent, flavourful and paired with a bold and fruity Shiraz, the tenderloin served with asparagus, mushrooms and pepper sauce proved to be one of the best I've eaten for a very long time. Other hearty dishes include grilled lamb cutlets, grilled duck breast, and fillet of sea bass.

Cuisine at The Terrace is as it should be; unpretentious, well presented and sensibly priced. Whether you are a golfer or not it's worth the trip out to this exceptional restaurant.

The Terrace is open for breakfast, lunch and dinner from 06.00 - 20.00 hrs. Mulligan's Pub is open from 12 noon - 22.00 hrs.

Confessions in a bottle — how to tell if the wine you are drinking really is off

Kathrin Puff, winemaker at Siam Winery, reveals how and why a wine loses its flavour

Relaxation is an important part of life, and people long to find equilibrium in their everyday chaos. But how we relax depends on our individual character. Some people like to read; some like to go dancing; some just run for hours; and some meditate over a glass of wine. We do these activities not only to enjoy a moment of peace and quiet; but as a well deserved gift to ourselves - especially in the case of a bottle of wine.

So there's nothing more annoying, then, than finishing a busy day at work, meeting up with friends, opening a bottle of wine, and then finding the wine is off - your moment of relaxation is completely ruined.

Wine is one of the most delicate drinks one can imagine. As it has an alcohol content of somewhere between 8-15 % vol., a pH of 3-3.8 and consists mainly of organic acids - and sometimes residual sugars etc. - it can still be affected by microbiological activity. Chemio-physic influences such as temperature change, sunlight, oxygen etc. can also ruin its taste.

Wine producers around the world try to combat these factors when preparing their wines by imagining the worst case scenarios; and also by educating people how to transport and store wine bottles. But still here and there the damage is done.

In the following list I describe a few 'off flavors' to look out for, and also the causes - which are not always within the control of the producer.

Cork taint:

This is the most common off-flavor to be found in a wine. Even with high quality corks, this flavor can still develop if there is the presence of Chlor or Brom. Special microbes form by integrating these two elements in their metabolism, and this results in the following tastes: wet towel, damp, moldy or simply cork itself. The bottle is spoilt if having cork taint.

Reduction:

This common off-flavor is not known by most people, but it occurs especially in wines that have been vinified strictly anti-oxidative, possibly through the application of too much SO₂ during bottling, or by avoiding aeration during or after fermentation (stressed yeasts). Even bottled wines with screw caps may have this off-flavor as they do not permit a passage of oxygen through the closure. The off-flavors perceived are described - in the best cases - as: lighted match, slate, asphalt, sulphury, and chalk. Most of the time the reduction can disappear shortly after opening the bottle, as air is the best cure against a reductive wine.

In the worst case though, the flavors are described as follows: Rotten eggs, pungent, stinky, onion, and garlic. In other words - not too good at all.

In this case, no amount of air will help to change the wine's flavor, and the wine is best judged as spoilt.

Oxidation:

This is also a common off-flavor, and the opposite of Reduction. In this case the wine has been enriched by oxygen during vinification or the bottling process, and the free sulfur was consumed immediately by the dissolved oxygen in the wine. Oxidized wines taste aged, not fresh anymore, with a strong note of ethanol or acetaldehyde (cut apple). In the worst case, the wine may remind you of Sherry or Port Wine. Even wrong storage can easily oxidize wine (high temperatures, sunlight etc).

I hope that you find this information useful. I will provide more examples in next month's article.

How Does Marriage with a Thai Affect Your Assets in Thailand?

Are you, a foreign national, planning to marry a person who has grown up in Thailand and is a Thai citizen? If so, you should have some information about marriage customs in Thailand, as well as about Thai laws governing matrimonial property and assets. The more familiar you are with these customs and legalities ahead of time, the more smoothly your wedding day will go, and the more comfortable you will be with the arrangements that need to be made regarding your assets.

Pre-wedding customs of betrothal

You'll find that most Thais want a wedding that follows the general traditions of the country. You begin, of course, with a proposal of marriage. While you and your beloved may have decided without too much fuss to marry each other, it is nevertheless expected that the man will ask permission from the parents of the bride. Once they grant permission for their daughter to marry, a traditional engagement or betrothal ceremony is arranged.

This ceremony, called thong mun, is attended by both sets of parents, as well as relatives and close friends on both sides. Instead of giving a diamond ring to his fiancée, as is common in Western countries, the prospective groom in Thailand is expected to give the bride's family a quantity of gold jewelry. Gold produced in Thailand is almost completely pure – usually 96%. The weight of gold is measured in baht: one baht of gold is equal to half a troy ounce, or 15.2 grams. Because the gift is for a couple, it is considered unlucky to give an odd number of baht. Therefore the minimum weight of the gift should be two baht of gold. Thong mun literally means 'engagement things' and these things signify that the man is sincere in his intentions toward the young woman. The elders of each family (the parents, and sometimes the grandparents) take this opportunity to discuss and come to an agreement on such matters as the appropriate amount of the dowry, auspicious dates and location for the wedding ceremony, and so on.

The dowry, or sinsod, is generally given to the parents of the bride on the actual day of the wedding. Its amount is determined by the two sets of families, with the bride's family having the right to call off the marriage if the sinsod they require cannot be paid by the groom. Normally, the requested amount of the dowry depends largely on the wealth of the suitor and his standing in society. It may be worth noting that Thais usually consider all Caucasians to be wealthy. The other consideration that goes into deciding the appropriate amount of the dowry is the value of the bride – her beauty, education, virtuous characteristics, personality, and so forth. (In the case of a second marriage, the dowry is normally waived.) It's not uncommon these days for the bride's family to return the dowry to the couple as a wedding gift.

The wedding ceremony

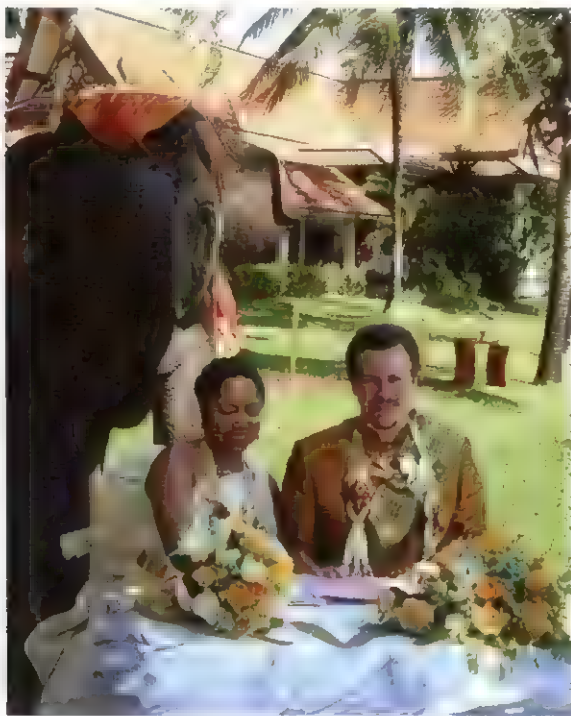

The traditional Thai wedding ceremony has many regional variations. Nevertheless, some elements are common to almost all Buddhist weddings in Thailand. In the morning, often at the home of the bride's parents, the wedding couple makes an offering to an odd number of monks (usually three, five, seven or nine), as the monks make their regular morning rounds seeking alms. The offering probably includes money and food, and is accompanied by many formal gestures of respect for the monks. The head monk may give the couple a blessing, or the couple may visit the temple to receive such a blessing.

Often there is a celebratory luncheon after this stage of the ceremonies, with both families and some relatives and friends in attendance. Later, a "binding" ceremony is conducted, usually by an elder of some standing in the community. Knotted strings are tied around the wrists of the couple to symbolize their union. The elder pours water from a conch shell over the couple's joined hands, and makes a brief speech in which he provides helpful tips on marriage. In the evening, a large wedding banquet is held, usually at a hotel, for family and friends. In all, the wedding celebrations can take up to two days. Every section of the wedding ceremony is full of expressions of respect for the parents and other elders, especially for the bride's parents.

Legal requirements and registration of marriage

Before you can be married in Thailand, both you and your intended spouse must provide documents proving that you are both single and free to marry, in accordance with Thai laws. Should you have previously been legally married in your home country, you'll need to provide the original certificate of divorce or death of your former spouse. If you're a foreigner, you must submit an affidavit or statutory statement of non-attachment, notarized by the embassy of your home country in Bangkok. Some embassies, for example those of the United Kingdom and the United States, can give you an Affidavit or Statutory Form to complete, and they will notarize it for you after completion. Other embassies may require you to give notarized proof of your marital status from your home country. Your passport (or passports, if both of you are foreign nationals) will also be required. The declarations of single status document must be translated into Thai, and must then be attested by the Thailand Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

■ sound financial structure for your marriage. It can not only protect the assets each of you brings to the marriage, but also assist you both in planning future investments. In a prenuptial agreement, you will:

clearly set out the terms for possession of your assets determine control of each spouse's property state how future earnings are to be treated decide how the assets will be divided, in case the marriage is dissolved at a later date

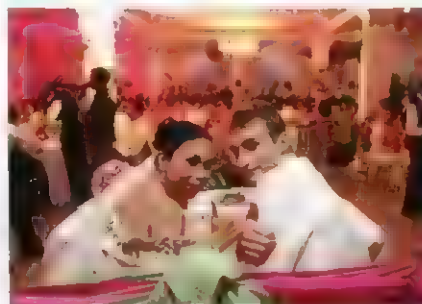

You may not want to think about such a possibility, but doing so before you marry can assure you that – whatever happens – you have done your financial planning

Once all your documentation is in place, you need to register your marriage at the local Amphur, or Civil Registry Office. Usually this legal registration takes place the day before or the day after the traditional Thai wedding ceremony described above. Your marriage certificate can be issued within a matter of hours, if all the documents are in order (and in Thai). As complex and formal as a traditional Buddhist wedding ceremony may be, it is nevertheless not recognized as a legal marriage in Thailand, nor is any other religious ceremony: it's the registration at the District Registry Office that makes your marriage legally binding. A marriage certificate issued in Thailand is recognized by all countries as legal.

Pros and cons of having a prenuptial agreement

Prenuptial agreements seem to have become more common in the last decade or so, although they remain somewhat controversial in Thailand. When you're making your wedding plans, it may seem insensitive to bring up the topic of a prenuptial agreement. You may feel that asking for such an impersonal document tends to depersonalize your entrance into matrimony, and in some way downplay the sacredness of your union. After all, a prenuptial agreement is a legal contract between you and your spouse-to-be. Each of you needs your own legal representation as you create the agreement, and each of you must openly and frankly disclose all your assets.

Taking all those feelings into account, it still must be said that a prenuptial agreement can be an excellent tool for helping you and your spouse build together, looking at fair treatment for both parties, and making certain that your assets will go to the recipients you intend. A prenuptial agreement is a little like a Last Will and Testament, in that it gives you an opportunity to plan carefully, rationally, and unemotionally ahead of the event. Both documents ensure that your wishes for your assets will be carried out in the future.

Who needs a prenuptial agreement?

You should definitely give serious consideration to having a prenuptial agreement if either of you fall into one or more of these categories:

You own or have a significant equity in ■ business

You own significant assets, such as stocks, properties, unit trusts, pension or retirement funds, or other superannuation funds

You are expecting a potential inheritance

You have children from a previous marriage

Remember that a prenuptial agreement is bound by the contractual laws of the jurisdiction (country) of each of the parties to the agreement. It must be objective and fair, and must include all the basic elements of a contract. If your agreement fails to meet any of these criteria, and if at any point you and your spouse contest its contents in a court of law, the agreement may be rescinded.

Property ownership by foreigners in Thailand

As a foreigner planning to live in Thailand with a Thai spouse, you have doubtless already discovered that the kingdom has clear legislation preventing foreign nationals from owning freehold land. It's difficult to work around this law, although there are a few exceptions. While you, as a foreigner, can own a condominium dwelling, you own only the building and not the land upon which it stands. If you and your Thai spouse purchase property together, you will have to sign a declaration that all the money used in the purchase transaction belonged entirely to the Thai spouse. Additionally, you must agree in writing that you have no future rights to the property. This means that, if your marriage is ever dissolved by divorce, the whole property will go to the Thai spouse. You can however enter into some agreements i.e. lease agreement with your Thai spouse to protect your interests on the joint property. Consulting a reputable lawyer pertaining to this matter is advised.

Conclusion

Your smartest move before making any major changes in your life in Thailand is to consult a reputable attorney, to discuss how Thai law may affect these changes. Such changes include marriage, purchase of real estate, divorce, and making a Last Will and Testament for your Thai assets (as separate from your assets in your home country). A good law firm can suggest other alternative ways for foreigners to own property in Thailand, and can point out the best ways for you to protect your assets, even if you are married to a Thai spouse.

Designed for Life – Franjipani Long Stay Resort

Hua Hin entrepreneur, Pramote Thanyakulsaja talks about his new and exciting project

Local businessman and property developer, Pramote Thanyakulsaja is passionate about Hua Hin. "It's my home town and I care about what happens here. I want to set new standards for developments so foreigners can buy a home with confidence," he says.

Having created the successful Tira Tira boutique condominium project in the centre of Hua Hin, Khun Pramote used his experience and valuable insight for his latest venture, Franjipani Long Stay Resort.

Pramote bought the land for Franjipani over a decade ago when he realized that Hua Hin had huge potential as a resort destination. Over the last 18 months he has developed his own unique concept and the project is already proving popular with foreign buyers.

The resort-style development offers leasehold units starting at 60 square metres, the largest studio units in Hua Hin. "Leasehold is the best option for a foreigner. If you buy freehold and after five years discover that there are defects with the construction, a common problem here in Thailand, you will have to bear the cost of repair. Under Thai law, however, a leasehold contract states that I am bound to maintain the property for the occupant," says Pramote.

Try before you buy

The forward-thinking entrepreneur's project also has another positive benefit for potential clients; he owns the land outright and construction has already been completed using his own funds. "Over the past few months Thailand's property market has experienced difficulties and sales dropped off at the end of last year but it has come back.

People still want to buy property in Hua Hin. However, people are more cautious and don't want to put money into anything they can't touch. Franjipani is complete and ready to move into now," asserts Pramote. In fact Pramote offers a 'try before you buy' scheme whereby interested buyers can rent units and enjoy the Franjipani experience before deciding if they want to buy. The project will include first class tenancy management that guarantees a minimum 5% return on investment. Currently, a special promotion allows prospective buyers to secure units with only a 35% deposit. The remaining 65% can be paid back over seven years. A Buy Back Guarantee of 50% of deposit is also offered.

Franjipani Resort has been designed to meet every desire and expectation of a quality recreational home. Set within a serene and scenic environment, homeowners can enjoy relaxed and refined living just 200 metres from the beach. Units are arranged in seven buildings, each with nine homes. On offer are 60 square metre one-bedroom units to 160 square metre two-bedroom Duplex units. Facilities at this outstanding residential resort include a fitness room, sauna, 80-metre swimming pool with Jacuzzi and paddling pool, parking area and 24-hour security.

Attracted by the build quality, design and security, several clients have decided to buy more than one unit and take advantage of the great potential to earn a rental income. "Foreign buyers are usually only here for three or four months a year for relaxation. This raises an important issue of security for homeowners. A house located in the countryside is at risk of theft and there are also often problems with water supply. Our central location ensures better security and a constant supply of water," says Pramote.

In order to better serve his valued customers, Pramote has also established a company that employs staff with experience in five-star resorts in order to ensure highly quality service. "If you follow the ideas of others you will never be a leader," says Pramote. "I have created my own concept that provides buyers with an enviable lifestyle at an affordable price."

Introducing Hua Hin Emerald Heights

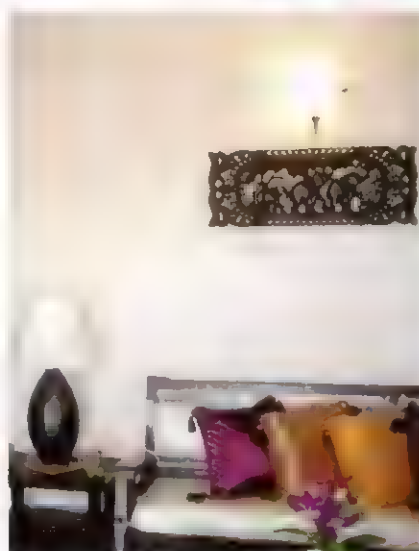

Hua Hin Emerald Heights represents exceptional value and an excellent investment opportunity. Located just 12 kilometres from the heart of Hua Hin, the project occupies an expansive nine rai plot of elevated land. The well-built homes enjoy some of the best views in the area, cooling coastal breezes and a lush green landscape. This superb parcel of land is the site for 26 villas. Three styles are available, each with a private pool, garden and of course, sweeping views of Hua Hin.

Construction of the villas is being carried out by an experienced and reputable contractor. The stylish homes are beautifully designed. The three bedroom houses feature quality fully fitted European kitchen comes as standard, along with a pool and spa, a hot water system, air conditioning, hi-speed internet, and landscaped gardens. Plot sizes are from 416 to 652 square metres land area and from 148 to 250 square metre living area.

As many homeowners in Hua Hin are not resident throughout the year, an important factor when considering purchasing a house in Hua Hin is security. Hua Hin Emerald Heights is a well-managed estate with 24-hour security and on-site services. The plot also has its own water supply and good drainage. Underground electricity cables means that there are no unsightly wires to obscure the view toward the sea or the mountain backdrop.

The quiet but convenient location of these contemporary homes is a major selling point for Emerald Heights. Few estates can boast such wonderful mountain and sea views so close to town. Homeowners will be just five minutes from the beach and a 15-minute drive to town.

Hua Hin Emerald Heights is located on Phetchkasem Road, 500 metres from Soi 156. Construction is underway and a house is currently available for viewing. A sales office is also on site.
